Warming and Cooling Products

Heat and cold both before and after sex can help relieve discomfort experienced with intimacy. Options include both external packs and internal warming and cooling products. A warm pack used over the lower abdomen and pubic area can help relax pelvic muscles before sex. Warm and cool packs, placed on the vulva, perineum, or your lower abdomen and pubic area, can ease pain and discomfort. Cool packs on the vulva or perineum can ease burning or head off irritation after sex. Many different shapes and sizes of packs are available. One product shaped specifically for women with pelvic pain, such as the EndoFEMM (www.dabloenterprises.com).

Something that can warm or cool internal tissues can be helpful before or after sexual activity. Some of these products can also be used to massage pelvic muscle trigger points. Some healthcare providers have men or women patients use the adult recreational products EZ Fit and EZ Magic (www.icrelief.com) that can be safely used (as directed) in this way warmed or cooled or used to massage trigger points. Or, ask your healthcare provider about using the finger of a rubber exam or kitchen glove filled with warm water (for relaxation before sex) or chilled water (for cooling after sex).

Moisturizers and Lubricants

Lubricants coat tissue surfaces and relieve friction and discomfort with sexual activity. Moisturizers penetrate and hydrate vaginal tissues and are helpful for general dryness, which can occur with menopause. Water- and silicone-based products are usually better choices. However, avoid products labeled “warming,” “tingling,” or something similar. These ingredients can be irritating. In that case, hypoallergenic products, such as Sylk, may be the best choice. Organic or natural products can be good choices but may not be hypoallergenic. There are pros and cons for the three key types of these products:

Petroleum and oil based	Petroleum and oil based products break down latex so cannot be used with condoms, diaphragms, or cervical caps. They can also be irritating, although natural oils, such as almond or olive, may not be.
Water based	Water-based products wash off easily and are usually nonirritating, although some people have difficulty with glycerin, paraben, or other ingredients.
Silicone based	Silicone-based products are waterproof and tend to lubricate longer. Although they’re not for everyone, some IC patients find they increase comfort.

Test a small amount of any product on yourself outside of sexual activity. A list of sample brands follow. Most are available in drug stores, others can be ordered through internet sites. Free samples, which many companies promote on their internet sites or sampler packs, such as from Good Vibrations (www.goodvibes.com), can help you choose a product that's right for you.
